
Title: A prompt on Diversity

Author: Zari MelGair

We are all creatures united under the great world of Sosaria. Yet, within its own means,
there are those who wish to segregate us as one.
Racism is alive and well within our society,

creating havok and
discontent among the
masses. The Lightbringers
don't like vampires and werewolvves. Werewolves
and vampires don't like Lightbringers. The line is
drawn fairly between the

two, only to reveal one thing. There is good and bad in all of us. There are shades of the past
that create who we are,
what we are, and where we come from. Though, it is within this message, it

creating havok and
discontent among the
masses. The Lightbringers
don't like vampires and
werewolvves. Werewolves
and vampires don't like
Lightbringers. The line is
drawn fairly between the

two, only to reveal one
thing. There is good and
bad in all of us. There
are shades of the past

that create who we are,
what we are, and where
we come from. Though, it
is within this message, it

we live in? Nay, we are not. We are a rainbow of colors that find within themselves thier own person, thier own identity, and that is what makes Sosaria a wonderful world to live in.

There is an in depth group of sociology within our world. We have our cultures. Malas, Trammel, Felucca. Then I suppose you could break it into clans, Sanctus, The order of the Ebon Skull,

Stonegate, just to name a few. Each of these
clans have thier own
culture, and within it
thier own subcultures:
Such as elves, gargoyles,
humans, werewolves,
undead, vampires. Yet

with these cultures, you find counter cultures.
Because the culture of one group in one culture of Sosaria, such as Sanctus or Stonegate,
may not act like the
group from the other

clan. It just moves to show that we are one people, yet our diversity makes us who we are.
And if not for that diversity, we would find ourselves lacking, and in a definatly boring world, and there are those who must learn to accept us for who we are, not what we are. We are a proud clan of people, and thusly we shall survive and thrive built off of our strength and honor.